

Through the Looking-Glass

Martin Robertson

Towards the hill would Alice go it slipped away from her.
At last she turned her back, and so drew quickly near.

That was a dream of contraries.
Our goal's before us, and —yet “Who would find his life. . .” Is this too mirror-land?